

DREXEL UNIVERSITY

Center for

Hunger-Free Communities

Job Description:

Policy & Communications Fellow

Drexel School of Public Health - Center for Hunger-Free Communities

The Center for Hunger-Free Communities founded in 2004, is a research, advocacy, and policy center of the Drexel University Dornsife School of Public Health that engages in multi-faceted research and action with the goal of developing innovative, empirically-tested solutions to the challenges of hunger and economic insecurity.

Our Mission

At the Center we address hunger in all its forms by engaging in partnership with families, researchers, policymakers, and community leaders to:

- Find solutions to hunger and poverty based on science and the human experience;
- Report on the health consequences of hunger and poverty to ensure accountability and enable action;
- Engage those who have experience with poverty as full partners in developing research, policies, and programs that promote health;
- Establish and support opportunities to build peace, nourishment, and a sense of shared community through our research, testimony, and action.

We are committed to freedom and justice by fighting against all forms of oppression, exclusion, and discrimination—including but not limited to racism, classism, sexism, transphobia/homophobia, and ableism—in the world, in our communities, and in ourselves.

Position Summary

The Center seeks a highly-motivated individual to be the Policy & Communications Fellow. This Fellow, under the supervision of the Policy Director, will assist the Center in communicating its work to the press, public, and policymakers.

Programs to Support:

Witnesses to Hunger is a groundbreaking advocacy program featuring the voices and photography of parents and caregivers of young children who have experienced hunger and poverty firsthand. Their photographs and narratives have been exhibited throughout the country, offering living testimony to the need for legislation that eliminates poverty and hunger in the United States. Members of Witnesses to Hunger work to encourage civic engagement in their own communities and in neighborhoods across the country.

Children's HealthWatch is a multi-site study that assesses how public policies and economic insecurity affect the health and development of very young children. The Center coordinates the Philadelphia site of Children's HealthWatch, a network of pediatricians, public health researchers, and children's health policy experts. Our findings help policymakers and the public better understand the social and economic factors that affect children's health so they can make well-informed policy decisions that give all children equal opportunities for healthy, successful lives.

Building Wealth and Health Network is a self-empowerment program that provides matched savings accounts and financial education through peer support. The program is built into the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program in Philadelphia. The Network is a peer-oriented asset-building model that helps families break the cycle of poverty. Ultimately, the Network has the potential to alter the structure of the United States public welfare system by empowering families to build their assets, social networks, and career success.

EAT (Everyone at the Table) Café is a nonprofit, pay-what-you-can café that nourishes, educates, and unites community in a welcoming environment. EAT Café is a collaboration between the Center for Hunger-Free Communities, the Center for Hospitality and Sport Management at Drexel University, the Vetri Community Partnership, and the West Philadelphia community.
