THE HAVERFORD
ENGLISH
DEPARTMENT

Fall 2022 Course Guide

CONTAINING DESCRIPTIONS OF READINGS,
APPROACHES, AND COURSE CONDUCT FOR ALL
DEPARTMENT OFFERINGS

CREATED BY SOPHIE CHOCHAeva HC'22
Major Requirements:

Admission to the major requires completion of at least two courses, one at the 100 level and 1-2 at the 200 level, by the end of the sophomore year; note: ENGL 150L may be counted as one 200-level course (since its rubrics are in line with 200-level materials).

In total major requires eleven credits, including a .5 credit tutorial (298J) as part of Junior Seminar. Note 399F and 399B comprise a 1.5 credit course taken over the full senior year.

- Seven courses at the 100, 200 and 300 levels of which
  - At least two must be in literature written before 1800
  - At least two in literature written after 1800
  - At least one (and no more than two) must be at the 100 level; a minimum of two, preferably three, must be at the 200 level (WRPR 150 “Approaches to Literary Analysis” counts); and a minimum of two must be at the 300 level.

- ENGL 298 and 299, the two-semester Junior Seminar in English
- ENGL 298J, the .5 credit yearlong Junior Seminar in English
- ENGL 399F (Fall) and 399B (Spring) for a total of 1.5 credit Senior Conference

Note: The department will give major credit for a one semester course in a foreign literature in the original language and/or for Comparative Literature 200. No more than four (4) major credits will be awarded for work done beyond the Tri-College Consortium, whether abroad or in the U.S. Courses taken in the Bryn Mawr English Department, the Swarthmore English Department, and the U. Penn English Department may also be counted towards the major at Haverford.

Creative Writing Concentration:

Creative Writing courses at Haverford are open to all students. Only a handful of English majors per year, however, are accepted into the Creative Writing Concentration.

The Creative Writing Concentration entails:

- Students interested in completing a Creative Writing Concentration must: 1) have taken or be in the process of completing two college creative writing courses by the spring of their junior year. 2) apply for acceptance to the Concentration by submitting a portfolio of creative work to the Director of Creative Writing in March of junior year
- Writing a senior thesis composed of an original creative text (usually poetry, fiction or drama) and a rigorous critical component.

Students interested in completing a Creative Writing Concentration apply for acceptance in the spring semester of their junior year by submitting a portfolio of creative works to Asali Solomon, Director of Creative Writing by the Friday before Spring Break of their junior year (no extensions). The Departmental Concentration Committee will grant admission to students whose work suggests their readiness to generate a substantial literary project.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>COURSE NUMBER</th>
<th>DIV. DIST. CROSSTLIST</th>
<th>COURSE NAME</th>
<th>CLASS HOURS</th>
<th>LTD. ENROLL.</th>
<th>INSTRUCTOR</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 101A</td>
<td>HU/GS</td>
<td>Theories of the Novel</td>
<td>T/Th 10-11:30am</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>McGrane</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 122A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Place &amp; Displacement</td>
<td>M/W 2:30-4pm</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>Finley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 215A</td>
<td>HU/VIST/AA</td>
<td>Realism, Race, Photography</td>
<td>M/W 1-2:30pm</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>Reckson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 225A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Shakespeare: The Tragic and Beyond</td>
<td>T/Th 2:30-4pm</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>Benston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 249A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Introduction to Asian American Literature</td>
<td>T/Th 1-2:30pm</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>Kim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 267A</td>
<td>HU/CL</td>
<td>Science Fiction since 1945</td>
<td>M 7:30-10pm</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>McInerney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 272A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Joyce/Beckett</td>
<td>T/Th 2:30-4pm</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>Sherman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 291A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Creative Writing: Poetry I</td>
<td>F 1:30-4pm</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>Devaney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 293A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Creative Writing: Fiction I</td>
<td>F 11:00-1:30 pm</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>Acker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 298A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Junior Seminar</td>
<td>T/Th 10-11:30am</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>McInerney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 304A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Dreaming the Medieval Landscape</td>
<td>T 7:30-10:00 pm</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>Allor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 309A</td>
<td>HU/PJHR/VIST</td>
<td>Against Death: Opposing Capital Punishment in American Literature and Culture</td>
<td>F 11:00-1:30 pm</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>Reckson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 362A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Topics in American Literature: Writing about Other People</td>
<td>M 1:30-4:00 pm</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>Stadler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ENGL 399A</td>
<td>HU</td>
<td>Senior Conference: McGrane, Mohan, Reckson, Stadler</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Cross-Listing Key:
- VIST = Visual Studies
- AA = Africana Studies
- CL = Comparative Literature
- GS = Gender & Sexuality Studies
- HLTH = Health Studies
- ENVS = Environmental Studies
Theories of the Novel: Embodying Desire and Loss

Course Description:

This course introduces students to the genre of the novel in English with a focus on desire, loss, and literary form. In order to ask the questions, 'Why and how do we read novels? What does this experience enable?' we will interrogate theories of the novel, its early formation and contemporary forms. We will also consider changing cultural representations of subjectivity, nation, race, gender, and ways of reading. How is the reader variously constructed as witness to (and participant in) desire and its demise? How do developments in narrative voice influence the idea of fiction as a didactic, pleasurable, speculative and/or imaginative space? What is the novel's role in effecting social change across centuries and geographies?

Open to majors and non-majors—no prerequisites. Limit: 20 students. Domains A/B & Gateway course to English

Course Requirements:

Students will attend all class meetings and participate actively in discussions (15%). In addition to reading assigned novels and theoretical excerpts, students will write three short essays (45%), lead group presentations (15%) and write a final paper or produce a creative project (25%). Students will also be asked to write brief reflections on readings.

Primary Readings may include:

Tsitsi Dangarembga, Nervous Conditions
Eliza Haywood, Fantomina
Brandon Taylor, Real Life
Jane Austen, Persuasion
Thi Bui, The Best We Could Do
Virgina Woolf, Mrs. Dalloway

The course will look carefully at what it is to be located in a particular place, environment, or cultural condition (both grounding and constraining), from which one is exiled, either from choice, necessity, or (violent) coercion. What is the end result of leaving or losing home upon the human person and the narrative of the displaced life that follows?

Class requirements:

Six short writing responses (1 1/2-2 pages) at roughly equal intervals throughout the term (approximately every two weeks), and one longer essay (4-5 pages) at end of term. Consistent class attendance and active participation in class discussion will be expected.
At the end of the nineteenth century, literary realism and photography were each deployed as methods of social reform, strategic efforts to renovate American society by “exposing” its stark inequities. Yet realism and photography could also reproduce those inequities in high contrast, helping to visualize and solidify hierarchies of race, nationality, gender, and class. This course will examine American realism and turn-of-the-century photography as complementary and sometimes competing practices, with a focus on their complex role in the imaging and imagining of racial identity. We’ll approach fiction and photography as contested sites of representation, used alternately to produce and naturalize racial difference as a “fact” of visual experience and to rewrite (or re-envision) the power dynamics embedded in seeing and being seen.

We’ll read major figures in American realism (including texts by Charles Chesnutt, Rebecca Harding Davis, W. E. B. Du Bois, Jacob Riis, Zitkala Ša, and Ida B. Wells) alongside important and recently recovered photographic archives (such as Francis Galton’s composite portraits, Lewis Hine’s depictions of factory labor conditions, Du Bois’s selections for the “American Negro” exhibit at the Paris Exposition of 1900, and Gertrude Käsebier’s images of Sioux performers after the massacre at Wounded Knee). Together we’ll explore historical and theoretical links between literary and photographic representation (or writing and “light-writing”) and examine literary, photographic, and pseudo-scientific conceptions of race as they circulated at the turn of the century. We’ll ask: how did literary realism and photography inform one another as aesthetic practices? How did each of these mediums produce, reproduce, and contest ideas about racial identity? What is the role of literature and photography in mediating historical memory, from legacies of systematic racial violence to coordinated acts of resistance? And how have writers, photographers, and critics sought to reclaim the power of the visual?

This course will introduce you to archival research methods and to major critical trends in visual culture studies. You will have the opportunity to recover, analyze, and share materials from the Haverford Special Collections, and to explore digital archives at the International Center for Photography and the Library of Congress. Secondary and theoretical readings will frame current approaches in visual studies, historicize literary realism and photography as aesthetic practices, and provide both critical and reparative frameworks for reading realism, race, and photography. This course is cross-listed in Visual Studies and Africana Studies.

Selected Readings

Stephen Crane, The Monster and Other Stories
W. E. B. Du Bois, The Souls of Black Folk
Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Iola Leroy
Jacob Riis, How the Other Half Lives
Zitkala Ša, American Indian Stories, Legends, and Other Writings
Richard Wright, Twelve Million Black Voices
Saidiya Hartman, Wayward Lives, Beautiful Experiments
Leigh Raiford, Imprisoned in a Luminous Glare

Selected Assignments

Eight responses to weekly discussion board
One collaborative annotation of a photograph
One presentation on archival materials
One short (2-3 page) analysis a literary or photographic text
One final essay (5 pages)
Contributions to a collaboratively curated exhibit of archival materials
An "introductory emphasis" study of the major tragedies, with special reference to the evolution of dramatic form, poetic style, characterization, and ideology as they are shaped by Shakespeare's persistent experimentation with dramas of extravagant will, desire, tyranny, skepticism, and death.

Particular attention will be paid to key scenes in an effort to assess both Shakespeare's response to contemporary literary and cultural concerns and the internal reformation of his own theatrical craft. In addition, films of most plays will be screened in order to study the "translation" of the Shakespearean text into other representational media and cultural moments. [As film analysis will provide an essential means of engaging issues of performance, students will be required to view all films (which we be made available online).]

There will also be multiple opportunities for student performance, may the spirit be willing.

Students will write essays of various lengths and kinds throughout the term, including a mid-term, a director's notebook, and a final consisting of several essays on a variety of topics.

I. Preludes to Interpreting Shakespeare

- Shakespeare/"Shakespeare"
- Theater/Performance
- Ideology/Cosmology/History
- Anamorphosis

II. The Emergence of Shakespearean Tragedy

- Richard III ..................But I

III. The Formation of Shakespearean Tragedy

- Romeo & Juliet .............What's in a name
- Julius Caesar ..............For my own part

IV. Shakespeare's Tragic Vision

- Hamlet ......................I am dead
- King Lear ...................Is this the promised end?

English 225a satisfies the pre-1800 requirement for the Haverford English major. Enrollment in this course will be limited to twenty-five.
ENGL H249A
TTH 1:00-2:30

Prof. Elizabeth Kim
Woodside 303
ekim1@haverford.edu

ENGL 249: Introduction to Asian American Literature

This course will explore the diversity of Asian American experience by studying a selection of foundational and emerging works by Asian American writers. Assigned readings of various literary genres will address themes such as immigration, generational conflict, racism, assimilation, difference, and political struggle. We will read and interpret texts in context by considering the historical events and periods they concern. What does Asian American identity, culture, and aesthetic look like? How do writers represent them? What does the racial and literary category “Asian American” constitute? Through studying a diverse range of narratives, we will gain a deeper understanding of the landscape of Asian American literary representation.

Texts

No-No Boy, John Okada
The Woman Warrior, Maxine Hong Kingston
Dictee, Theresa Hak Kyung Cha
Rose, Li-young Lee
Native Speaker, Chang-Rae Lee
The Interpreter of Maladies, Jhumpa Lahiri
Night Sky With Exit Wounds, Ocean Vuong
The Fortunes, Peter Ho Davies
Minor Feelings, Cathy Park Hong
Global SF since 1945

SF—science fiction, speculative fiction—is the primary allegorical mode of the contemporary world. Stories set in the far future or in alternative presents or pasts permit profound reflections upon and critiques of the world we inhabit today. This course explores the explosion of the genre in the decades since the Second World War and the advent of atomic weapons. We will read a few classics of post-apocalyptic fiction from the ‘50s and ‘60s before turning to stories that engage queer identities, Afrofuturism and African futurism, and the global threat of climate change.

Required Texts:

Ray Bradbury, The Martian Chronicles (Simon and Schuster)
Angela Carter, Heroes and Villains (Penguin)
Ursula LeGuin, The Left Hand of Darkness (Ace)
Octavia Butler, Kindred (Beacon)
N.K. Jemisien, The Fifth Season (Orbit)
Kazuo Ishiguro, Klara and the Sun (Vintage)

Please note that many of these are less expensive if you choose the Kindle Edition and that is perfectly fine. Audiobooks are also an option for some texts.

Additional materials (stories by Joanna Russ, Shineshi Hoshi, Samuel Delany, Shingai Njeri Kagunda, Stanislaw Lem, essays by Judith Butler, Elizabeth Kolbert, Susan Sontag, etc.) will be posted to the course Moodle.

Required Work:

1 short (3-5 page) essay 15%
1 personal reflection on the way science or technology has affected you 10%
1 film review (your choice of film) 10%
2 "thought experiments," one verbal and one non-verbal 30%
1 longer (8-10 page) essay due at the end of the semester 25%
Regular and engaged participation 10%

Learning goals:

Students
- will learn to think critically about the connections between technology and consciousness, humans and their environment, late capitalism and personhood, systems of power and oppression
- will gain the skills to read both fiction and non-fiction closely and critically
- will learn to write more clearly and persuasively
Joyce/Beckett

Writing for The Guardian in 1991, Seamus Deane characterized Irish writing in general and Beckett's writing in particular as caught between "silence and eloquence": "Yet time and again the rhetoric of their work enacts a movement that begins in aphasia and ends in eloquence." We will want to test this critical formulation against the work itself, in this case a comprehensive reading of Joyce, in the most prolix, the most carnivalized of texts, Ulysses and Finnegans Wake, and Beckett, where texts border upon or court in silence their own undoing. We will want to press issues of language, of text, of reading, of narration, and the experimentalism in form that produces these as issues that exfoliate from these texts. As an alternative or possible corrective to readings which seem to isolate language and theory, we will also want to recuperate Joyce and Beckett as Irish writers in the postcolonial readings that are much underway in the critical community, looking for the inscription of and marking of that colonial experience in the language itself. More provocatively, perhaps, we will want to suggest that those experiences of a (post)colonial language are not unrelated to but form a radicalized space in which to explore seemingly theoretical issues of language entailed in the philosophically rich problematic of language as it mediates (or fails to mediate) consciousness.

Texts:

Joyce: Ulysses; Finnegans Wake (in part)

Beckett: Murphy; The Unnamable; Waiting For Godot; Not I; Krapp 's Last Tape; Endgame

The writing assignments for the course will be diverse, and will include an essay written on Joyce and one on Beckett, drawing on the scholarship and developed through a draft and final version; brief critical exegeses of text, and a final response to the reading which can take the form of poetry, fiction, visual media of any kind, music, etc.
Creative Writing Poetry I | ENGLH291A01
Thomas Devaney | Friday 1:30-4 pm

CW Poetry I is an introductory creative writing workshop. The workshop involves both reading and writing poetry. Students will have the opportunity to expand their repertoire by modeling their pieces in conversation with the work of various poets including Federico García Lorca, William Carlos Williams, Ada Limón, and Tracy K. Smith. We will analyze and investigate issues of form, including Haiku and sonnets. The class will workshop in both small and large groups. Students will come out of the course with a short collection of their individual work submitted as a final portfolio.

A final portfolio of revised poems (10 to 12 pages) is required.

TEXTS:
- Sleeping on the Wing, edited by Kenneth Koch and Kate Farrell
We are made of stories, the ones we've been told and the ones we tell ourselves. In this course, students will harness this instinct to understand, analyze, and create fictional stories. By reading and critically engaging with short fiction and craft essays, students will learn the essential elements of fiction (plot, theme, structure, character, and language). Students will then utilize that knowledge to further the craft of their own stories. This class will use workshop as a primary learning tool, giving students the opportunity to ask thoughtful and thought-provoking questions of their colleagues, opening the door to every person’s next, best draft. Readings will include short fiction by Jhumpa Lahiri, Ken Liu, Karen Russell, Dantiel Moniz, Danielle Evans, Nathan Englander, and others.

The success of this course depends on each student’s deep engagement with the readings, the work of their colleagues, and their own writing.

Course Requirements: Students will write two stories for workshop (6-10pp), write responses to classmates’ workshop stories, substantively contribute to in-class discussions, and complete weekly writing exercises. Students will also revise one story to turn in for their final project.
Junior Seminar in English

The Junior Seminar is a year-long intensive study in the theory and practice of literary interpretation, or how and why we read literature the way we do. The loose theme of this year's seminar is "Crises and Care." As colleagues brought together through a shared commitment to literary studies, we'll ask: why literature and why now? What does literature afford us in the long afterlife of colonialism and racial slavery, in the ravages of late stage capitalism and the ongoing slow (but increasingly fast) wreck of climate catastrophe, in the biopolitical order that legislates who lives and dies in a racialized global pandemic? What are the worlds that literature enables us critique or, alternatively, imagine into being? In the fall, we'll focus on poetry and poesis; in the spring we'll focus on narrative and prose (acknowledging this is an imperfect delineation, with a range of hybrid forms within these categories and a world of literary genres that lie outside of them). Throughout the year, we'll attend to the colonial history of English as a discipline and to the interdisciplinary decolonial methods that sustain the urgency of literary studies today. We'll also explore how literature and the collective study of literature might constitute an undisciplined practice of care in the face of intersecting global crises.
This course will enter the imagined landscapes of the medieval period through one of its most popular genres: the dream vision. We will explore visions of strange forests, mystical gardens, glass temples, and jeweled cities; visions that offer the potential for divine insight into the natural order of the universe but also possess surprising specificity in their plant, animal, and inanimate inhabitants. Our focus will be on literary texts, but our syllabus will also include excerpts from scientific, philosophical, and religious writings of the medieval period.

Alongside medieval texts from western Europe and beyond, we will investigate how the contemporary field of environmental humanities has developed over the past fifty years. This interdisciplinary body of critical theory examines the interconnections between human culture and the physical world in the context of anthropogenic climate change. For our purposes, we will trace how the Middle Ages has been characterized as an unenlightened foil to the environmental consciousness of the present—or even as the source of the ideologies that undergird climate change and environmental devastation. We will complicate this narrative of progress by examining how medieval theories of “nature” compare with modern theorizations of the environment, and asking what the fictional landscapes of dream visions meant to medieval writers and readers—and how these texts cause us to reflect on our own environmental values.

Most works will be read in translation, although this course will also provide an introduction to Middle English and three texts (House of Fame, Parliament of Fowls, and The Floure and the Leafe) will be read in the original.

Texts:
Anonymous, The Book of Arda Viraf
Guillaume de Lorris and Jean de Meun, Romance of the Rose
Geoffrey Chaucer, House of Fame
Geoffrey Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls
Pearl-poet, Pearl
William Langland, Piers Plowman (excerpts)
Anonymous, The Floure and the Leafe
Christine de Pizan, The Path of Long Study

Various critical essays and excerpts of longer works in the field of environmental humanities

Course Requirements:
Two short papers (3 pp. each), an annotated bibliography of secondary criticism (3–5 pp.), a research paper or creative final project (10–15 pp.), and active participation.
Against Death
Capital Punishment in American Literature and Culture

Is it much to die?
Langston Hughes, “Scottsboro” (1932)

In the long history of capital punishment in the U.S., writers and artists have played an active role in shaping—rather than simply reflecting—public discourse around justice and punishment. This course examines the history of literary and cultural responses to capital punishment, beginning with the introduction of privately conducted state-sanctioned executions in the 1830s and ending shortly after the reinstatement of the death penalty in 1976 following a four-year moratorium. We’ll look at representations of the death penalty in novels, essays, plays, poems, photography, and film, with an emphasis on the relationship between art and social protest; interwoven histories of race, gender, sexuality, class, and criminality; and the relays between capital punishment, media, and other technologies of social power. What is the relationship between culture and punishment in the U.S.? To what extent has literature been able to challenge narratives of social, political, and technological progress that adhere to capital punishment? And how might we track the intersection between artistic and political forms of protest?

We’ll explore responses to the death penalty in two directions: first, as they coalesce around specific events and figures (including Nat Turner’s revolt, John Brown’s raid on Harper’s Ferry, the Haymarket riot, Leon Czolgosz, Sacco and Vanzetti, the Scottsboro nine, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg); and second, as they aim to register the anonymous and largely unspectacular deaths taking place with punctuated regularity, often behind prison walls and out of public view. We’ll take up debates around the reproduction of suffering, attending to how the history of capital punishment has intersected with histories of media, spectacle, and entertainment culture. We’ll ask how specific representational modes (including melodrama, documentary, confession, realism, and reenactment) have either obscured or brought into relief the organization of social power. And finally, we’ll explore literature’s role in what philosopher Jacques Rancière has called the “distribution of the sensible”—the organization of social relations through what is and is not perceptible. How has literature made visible, audible, and tangible the executions of liberal democracy? And how has it imagined alternative possibilities?

This course is cross-listed with Peace, Justice, and Human Rights, Visual Studies, and Africana Studies. We will engage in workshops with the Coalition to Abolish Death by Incarceration and Let’s Circle Up, and participate in the Hurford Center’s 2022-2023 Abolition and Decarceration programming.

Selected Readings

Sterling Brown, “Remembering Nat Turner”
Kyle Baker, Nat Turner
Layli Long Soldier, “38”
Lucy Parsons, The Life of Albert Parsons
Langston Hughes, Scottsboro, Limited
Aaron Douglass, “Scottsboro Boys”
Adrienne Rich, “For Ethel Rosenberg”
Avery Gordon, Ghostly Matters
Judith Butler, Precarious Life
Michelle Alexander, The New Jim Crow
Michel Foucault, Discipline and Punish

Assignments

At least 8 responses to weekly discussion questions on Moodle (approx. 300-500 words/each)
One in-class presentations (15 minutes)
One short essay (5 pages)
One long essay (10 pages) or a creative project with theoretical introduction
Workshops with the Coalition to Abolish Death by Incarceration and Let’s Circle Up
English 362a: Topics in American Literature: Writing About Other People
Monday 1:30-4
G. Stadler

Taking its name from a brilliant lecture on literary and visual portraiture by Gertrude Stein, this seminar examines writing by Anglo American and African American writers that explicitly aims to convey the life of (or something essential about the life of) another person. It will focus, in particular, on writing that experiments with the portrait as a mimetic or realist form of representation (e.g. the conventional understanding of biography as a genre). Some of the modes of experimentation that we’ll encounter: literary impressionism, textual collage, archival plunges, explorations of the erotics of portraiture, portraiture as a mode of retelling and repairing historical and personal trauma, collective portraiture, and others. We’ll make continual reference to visual forms of portraiture, including painting, photography, video art, and cinema. A significant portion of the writing we do will be our own experiments with literary portraiture, including occasional imitations of other writers’ mode of portraiture. We’ll also consult a range of critical and theoretical works (broadly construed) and construct a collective bibliography of theories of portraiture (again, broadly construed).

Primary readings and viewings will include most of the following:

Roland Barthes, Mythologies (excerpts)
Erskine Caldwell and Margaret Bourke-White, You Have Seen Their Faces
William Wells Brown, Clotel
Willa Cather, My Antonia
Saidiya Hartman, Wayward Lives, Beautiful Experiments
Henry James, Daisy Miller
Isaac Julien, Looking for Langston
Dana Spiotta, Stone Arabia
Gertrude Stein, Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas (excerpts), various literary portraits
Lytton Strachey, Eminent Victorians (excerpt)
Andy Warhol, Screen Tests, Sleep, Empire, Blow Job, excerpts from The Philosophy of Andy Warhol
William Carlos Williams, In the American Grain (excerpts)
Richard Wright and various photographers, 12 Million Black Voices

Critical theoretical readings will include work by Judith Butler, Michael Fried, Laura Mulvey, Sarah Blackwood, Jaime Hovey and others.

Prerequisites: A 100 level course in English as well as either English 150L or a 200 level course in English; or two 200 level courses in English; or consent of instructor. Enrollment limited to 15 students.
“The colonized man finds his freedom in and through violence”—Frantz Fanon, Wretched of the Earth

The decisive role that Fanon attributes to violence in the colonial context has had an inexorable afterlife in the postcolonial world. Fanon argues that violence functions like a language in the colonial system, such that the militant who seeks to overthrow the colonizer is only writing back in the colonizer’s own language. We will explore this premise by asking whether this dynamic is structured by the specific roles and values attached to men and women in particular societies and historical contexts. The texts we will be reading for the course explore various permutations of the dialectic of violation and violence but, contrary to Fanon, they present it as a mutating, complex phenomenon that draws its energies from multiple histories and traditions that are not always centered on the colonial experience. Among other matters, these texts expose: The brutalities of despotic states and rulers; the entanglement of family dynamics in resistance to an oppressive state; the effects of the unacknowledged intrusion of metropolitan values into precarious societies on the brink of chaos; the dangers and beauty of bearing witness to violation; the collusion of sexual excitement, feminine rebellion, political repression, and armed resistance; and the tensions and conflicts existing between different communities that co-exist tenuously in the world. However, though these texts have in common a concern with political violence they locate it in relation to culturally specific and gendered values such as shame, honor, purity, and sacrifice. In addition, they draw their peculiar charge from the ways the corporeality or the embodied politics of the militant or the victim is made to stand in for the body politic. In representing the material violence of political repression and insurgency these texts lead us to ask with Jacques Derrida whether representation itself is originally violent, and whether violence is “congenital to phenomenality,” that is to say whether it is the enabling condition and essential feature of speech that makes power legible.

The specific aesthetic challenges, ethical questions, and narrative pressures generated by these explosive topics will be the ongoing focus of our analyses. We will explore the strategies of historical referencing these texts adopt, and ask whether their occasionally overwrought symbolism undercuts their political urgency or challenges our capacity to apprehend what they depict. We will consider how the extremity of the subject matter of these texts and the ideological battlegrounds in which they operate demand their reaching beyond the conventions of realism into the realms of the magical, the surreal, and the grotesque. Of related interest will be the ways these texts experiment with temporal sequence and continuity, and often stage apocalyptic climaxes that collapse past, present, and future. To explore the role of the public spectacle in amplifying the power and scope of political violence, we will discuss films such as Shekhar Kapoor’s Bandit Queen, Santosh Sivan’s The Terrorist and Gillo Pontecorvo’s The Battle of Algiers.

Required Texts:
Assia Djebar, Children of the New World
J.M. Coetzee, Waiting for Barbarians
Frantz Fanon, Wretched of the Earth
Michelle Cliff, No Telephone to Heaven
Michael Ondaatje, Anil’s Ghost
Salman Rushdie, Shame
Kamila Shamsie, Home Fire
Ngugi wa Thiongo, Weep Not Child

Course requirements:
Written work: Two short papers (about 5 pages long); a research paper (about 10 pages); class presentation; regular participation in class discussions.

Pre-requisites:
2 200-level courses or consent of instructor.